passively alarmed Susy and she sent a note to their doctor. No medicine ever did more good than Dr. King's talk to his patient.
"Unless I take some stimulant I can't sit up," John said.
"Then lie down. Fight it out on that line." Alcohol is ruinous to one of your temperment, even in small quantities. Indeed, what is termed 'moderate drinking' is more injurious than indulgence to excess with intervals of abstinence, though, in my opinion a little is excess.
"But it is hard to give up and lie down, doctor, when one has a wife and baby to care for. If I were alone I shouldn't care what became of me."
"Oh, you will feel different after you get into the country. Live in the open air, drink cold water, do not tire yourself, sleep a great deal, and don't worry. It will make a new man of you in three months."
After a week of waiting and hoping a letter came from the publisher.
He could not publish the work, but he was interested in the author through the representation of his wife, and was glad to be of service to them in another way. A friend of his who edited a paper had looked over the MS, and thought it would do for a serial. He would give $100, and would like to hear further from the writer. The check was enclosed.
"Is it too little?" asked Susy, anxiously.
"Not far waste paper. No, I could do better now if I were well. When I do get strong that paper will be a good chance for me."
Nothing further delayed their journey, and a few days more found them babies and all, in the cool, quiet, country home. The doctor had advised the use of stimulants during the journey, but positively none when the journey should be over.
"Now I am going to nurse you, Jack, and do just as the doctor said."
"Well," was the indifferent response.
"In the first place, you need not get up till you want to. I will bring you some breakfast."
"Fine idea!" said John, trying to rise and falling back on his pillow. "I believe I am sick, Susy."
"Of course you are, but you'll not be long," and Susy went down to breakfast, carrying the baby in her arms and leading little Susy by means of her dress skirt.
When she came up again her mother was with her, full of motherly anxiety and brimming with medical suggestions.
"I'll fix him something that will set him right up," and soon brought him a tumbler of hot brandy sling, fragrant with nutmeg.
"Drink that," she said; "it will give you an appetite. I'll fix you up a nice breakfast."
Susy had the tumbler, and as soon as her mother had gone out, she emptied it out of the window.
"I wish you could drink it, Jack," she said but you know what the doctor said.
"I think you strain a point," John said. "It isn't once, but the habit."
"Once make the habit."
"Even Paul advised Timothy to take wine for his 'stomach's sake,'" John said, faintly argumentative.
"I don't care anything about Timothy; I am now taking care of you," Susy replied irreverently.
John was tired and yielded the point. After his dainty breakfast he managed to dress; then they went out on the piazza and Susy read aloud while he lay on a cushioned settee.
"Here is the place for us to build our house, Susy."
"Just over there, Jack, on the level ground in front of the grove."
"What is that?" said Susy's father who had just come to the house to rest during the heat of the day. "Going to settle here? All right. Say the word and Susy shall have half the farm. What's the use waiting till I die?"
There were many struggles with the fateful habit, but John and Susy won the battle, and now their dream of home is come true.
John did not become a famous writer but he is a good farmer and contributes some spicy sketches to the newspapers. He, too, is a temperance lecturer, and always interests an audience when he dwells upon the evils of "moderate drinking" and using "tonics."
A rough specimen of humanity was recently promenading up Chatham street, New York, when he came plumply upon a Jew, a specimen of his race, about whom there is no mistake.
Without a word of warning, the rough knicker sprang in the gutter. Picked himself up, and taking his bleeding nose between his finger and thumb, he demanded an explanation.
"Shut up; I'll bust yer again!" shouted the aggressor, approaching him again.
"I have never done nothing mit you,

and what for you mash me in the nose?" asked Abraham.
"Yes yer have; yer Jews crucified Jesus Christ, and I have a mind to go for you again."
"But, mine Gott, dat vash eighteen hundred years ago," said the Jew.
"Well, I don't care if it was, I only heard of it last night," replied the unwashed, and he went for him again.

THE DETROIT
WEEKLY TRIBUNE!
FOR 1872.
The Best Family Newspaper in the Northwest.
The coming volume of the Detroit Weekly Tribune promises to be one of unusual merit and attractiveness. It will be under the Editorial Supervision of
WILL M. CARLETON,
Author of the famous "Farm Ballads," and will enjoy all the benefits that can be derived from his cultivated literary taste.
Mr. Carleton will also write regularly for the Detroit Weekly Tribune, and his contributions to the columns will make their first appearance therein
and be furnished to his other journals.
The publishers of the Tribune have made the following announcement with peculiar pleasure:— Mr. Carleton has through his "Ballads" become known in almost every home in the Nation. His poems have been remarkable for felicity of expression, for the dramatic skill with which their themes have been handled, for their kindly wit and their rare naturalness, and especially for the truthness of their sentiment, which touches all hearts, and has made their author famous. Mr. Carleton is also a journalist of experience, and will thus bring to his new task both rare literary accomplishments and valuable professional skill.
The Weekly Tribune for 1872 will far surpass all its competitors in Its Commercial Department.
The fullness and accuracy of its market reports have already attracted widespread attention, and its proprietors propose to devote still more care and money to this most useful feature of the paper. It will give in each issue a concise history of all commercial transactions of interest to readers, and will by its peculiar system of reporting present a vivid and faithful photograph of the actual condition of the market.
This feature of the paper alone may save to every buyer or seller of produce far more than its subscription price.
The Detroit Weekly Tribune for 1872 will also have many other features.
It will give in each issue succinct and clear summaries of the current news, domestic and foreign.
It will continue to devote special attention to the prompt collection and publication of Michigan news,
and will make its columns the vehicle of all information of interest to Michigan readers.
Its Agricultural Department has gained for it hosts of friends. It is under the charge of men of practical experience, and it has become a valuable channel for the interchange of views among the patrons of the paper. No pains will be spared to preserve the usefulness and the freshness of these columns.
The Tribune will retain its old place as the leading Republican journal of Michigan, pointing with pride to its record in the past, and promising to be always found enrolled among the foremost champions of progress, liberal ideas, and of true reform.
It will discuss all questions of public interest with candor and boldness, and it will ever be found on the side of Christian principles in all the great social, political and moral issues of the times.
Constant additions will be made to its literary features, and carefully selected poems, sketches, columns. In furnishing reading for the home credible The Detroit Tribune will not allow itself to be surpassed by any of its competitors.
The proprietors will constantly be added to this journal, and its proprietors are determined to constantly strengthen it by all possible means its title to the firm hold it has obtained upon the esteem and confidence of the people of Michigan and the Northwest.
